“Is there Lead Paint in Your Offshore Code?”

Today, there is more than $100 billion in custom code being developed in locations such as India, China, Eastern Europe, and South America. At the same time, attacks on applications have grown exponentially. Thus, organizations utilizing offshore code are at greater risk than ever before. This presentation will examine risk enterprises encounter when obtaining insecure code from off-the-shelf software and applications developed offshore. Puglia will describe five best practices for secure procurement that will enable enterprises to obtain a practical understanding of risk related to external code, as well as specific steps to secure their organization.

Presented by Mike Puglia, Veracode Director of Product Marketing

Mike has more than 15 years of product management and marketing experience. He has acquired extensive security skills and helped launch the first security solution for enterprise wireless LAN deployments. Mike has spoken at many industry events including Interop, Network World Security Seminars, and has lectured on IT security with IP3, MIS and TechTarget.
